NOTE

To those whose portraits appear in this volume, I am gratefully thankful. It gives to the Republicans of Ohio a gallery of leaders of the party in State and Nation. Our only regret is that more did not comply, thereby adding to its value as a souvenir of the memorable campaign of 1900.

Respectfully yours,

Columbus, March 1, 1901. WM. L. BLOOMER.

Retrospect and Foreword

THE Ohio Republican campaign of 1900 was in one respect unique. It was conducted, in its Presidential aspect, in entire independence of the Republican National Committee. General Charles Dick reluctantly accepted its management, at the earnest request of leading Republicans of the State, to which was added the wish of President McKinley himself. But he made the stipulation that he should have its absolute control, both in its national and state aspects. That he and the National Committee were in hearty accord, goes without saying; but General Dick's word was final as to any matter pertaining to the Ohio campaign. He is therefore entitled to full credit for the splendid victory achieved in the President's home state, as it was due to his acute political sagacity and superb executive ability.

He realized from the first that the real issue between the two great parties was the same as in the tremendous battle of 1896; and that, could the voters be brought to see this, victory, complete and overwhelming, was assured. The outcome proved the correctness of his judgment, and the sagacity of the methods of work based upon it.

The Republican campaign was waged largely upon educational lines, and therefore the party newspapers of the state were a most important factor in the contest. Never did they take up the work with more enthusiasm, nor carry it on more steadily and persistently. Their efforts surpassed, in energy and efficiency, even those of the splendid campaign of four years ago Chairman Dick is a thorough believer at all times in the newspaper as an educational factor of the first importance in political work. Hence he took the deepest interest in the work of the Press Bureau. He was never to busy to discuss matters pertaining to its sphere, or to give his counsel to the methods of conducting its work.

The cartoon service of the Press Bureau has been a notable feature of the Ohio Republican campaigns for several years. A spirited and "pat" cartoon reaches the understanding at a glance. It furnishes an argument or an answer more easily comprehended by most persons than one which involves the reading of a half-column of letter-press. This service for 1900 was exceptionally strong. Mr. William L. Bloomer, the artist, is a young man, still in the period of mental and artistic growth; and every succeeding year his political cartoons have shown a marked improvement in vigor and excellence. The numerous requests which came to the Press Bureau from all over the state for more cartoons than were furnished at first, is the best possible testimony to the telling quality and great political usefulness of Mr. Bloomer's artistic productions.

The present volume is made up from those furnished during the late campaign, and is issued in compliance with requests from Republicans all over Ohio, who desire to possess a souvenir of the triumphant Presidential and state campaign of 1900 That it may have a circulation commensurate with the merits of the artist, is the earnest wish and sincere hope of the writer

Gen. Grosvenor's Figures.

April 28, 1900.

It is obviously too early to make an intelligent forecast of the result of the Presidential election. So much depends upon the full tickets and the platforms of the two parties and upon the events that may happen between now and November that no prophecy can be anything more than a hope-fathered guess.

Nevertheless the electoral table given by Gen. Grosvenor, a close friend of the President and an experienced politician, is interesting. Gen. Grosvenor claims for McKinley these states:

California	9	North Dakota	3
Connecticut	6	Ohio	23
Illinois	24	Oregon	4
Indiana	15	Pennsylvania	32
Iowa	13	Rhode Island	4
Maine	6	South Dakota	4
Massachusetts	15	Vermont	4
Michigan	14	Washington	4
Minnesota	9	West Virginia	6
New Jersey	10	Wisconsin	12
New Hampshire	4	Wyoming	3
New York	36
		Total	260

He concedes to Mr. Bryan these:

Alabama	11	Montana	3
Arkansas	8	Nebraska	8
Colorado	4	Nevada	3
Florida	4	North Carolina	11
Georgia	13	South Carolina	9
Kentucky	13	Tennessee	12
Idaho	3	Texas	15
Louisiana	8	Utah	3
Maryland	8	Virginia	12
Mississippi	9
Missouri	17	Total	174

And he names as doubtful Delaware, with 3 electoral votes, and Kansas with 10.

Senator John K. Jones' Figures.

April 29, 1900.

Senator John K. Jones, Chairman of the National Democratic Committee, refused to be quoted as predicting the way the states will vote for President next November, but the following estimate by states is from quite as authoritative a source, and shows the conservative expectations of the Bryan managers. It answers the figures given by Representative Grosvenor, the spokesman and official election prophet of the McKinley party.

The Democratic Estimate.

224 electoral votes necessary to elect.
